LEARNING THE SECRET

In the world of job seeking there are secrets, little known and carefully guarded methods of turning job seeking into employment. These are rarely if ever shared with job seekers as the more people who know about them; the more likely is that they will fail you.

LEARNING THE SECRET

These are closely guarded and because they are, they still can turn you into an employed worker.

This is why we are widely disliked in the Workforce Industry as we are willing to teach you that job seeking is not rocket science but, it simple and effective if you learn a few simple rules.

We are willing to share and educate you because our business plan does not depend upon us keeping you uneducated.

At the USJ, there are no revolving doors as we share in your success rather than profit from your continued failure.

Each of these jobs requires that you make an investment.

This is an investment of your time, your willingness to devote the effort to doing the process correctly and the patience to follow (sometimes) complicated application procedures or processes.

Workforce Industry actually works. We want to dismiss several urban myths and misconceptions here to get them out of the way.

SIZE MATTERS: You have always been told "the bigger the better" and many times this has proven to be correct but, in the Workforce Industry it is not true. In fact, the bigger the organization is, the more impersonal they become to you as they deal with too many people, their staff are overwhelmed by large case loads and you become a mere number on some accounting spreadsheet as a means of them getting big grant money.

Large organizations are more bureaucratic and are saddled with a large layer of administration where (like in my Army Days) there is 8-10 support staff for every job developer.

Such organizations lose their balance and consume the government resources that were given to help you.

It is just common sense that the more administrative support staff that an organization has, the less help there will be for you.

As the big organizations pattern themselves after the federal government, the smaller organizations pretend to be big organizations to attract more clients. While you would think that being smaller would give them the advantage in being able to recreate their operations to meet changes in the job market instead many try to imitate their larger cousins. The few who do and are successful in giving their clients an advantage are sooner-or-later swamped by new applicants who heard and came for help.

Seemed like a simple supply-and-demand formula was working and it did initially did. It did until the best-and-brightest were used up and the remaining inventory of applicants started showing up defective and damaged.

At this point the plan started to tear-a-part. Sales (staff) meetings became more heated and angered as the Sales Manager

This whole industry is so caught up on the business-to-business plan that everything has been reduced down to mere numbers on an accountant's spreadsheet.
No more of this crap about winning the minds and hearts and even less about turning lives and families around.
It is all about sales numbers, quotas and spreadsheets.

new orders from the business community and gave the Sales Reps some breathing space to wheel-n-deal.

This was until the impossible happened and the inventory started to revolt and started refusing job referrals.

Back in panic mode to restore the status quo of their business-to-business business plan, the large organizations decided that they needed a drastic plan to raid the smaller organization to be able to cherry pick the best of the best from them.

This had to be done with a gentile hand

For four years now, the Auntie Sue and Uncle Bob USED JOB SHACK has brought you into this new era of seeking and finding real jobs from employers that are really hiring.

For four years, we have taught you the new methodologies that make it full-proof to turn yourself into a "Ringer" for every job you apply for.

For four years, we have taught you to abandon old, worn out employment seeking advice that is older than most of the readers.

We have taught you how the system works and how to navigate yourself into an advantage.

All the while, across the community, people have adopted the USED JOB SHACK Methods and they are finding that their dream of entering (re-entry) into the job market is substantially easier.

Your continued success proves that we are revolutionizing the job seeking market.

Dr. Kickau is here today with a range of suggestions on how to be successfully bridge the gap between what your experience is and what skills the employer is seeking in a "down-sizing-yourself" position or opportunity.

Several years ago, in 2011, Dr. kickau was faced with a life changing career moment and was (after 20 years as a cranky, old and angry bureaucrat with the Department of That Isn't Gonna Happen) thrown out into a

She had a killer (one-size-fits-all) resume that she spent over $300 on and it was beautifully written, composed and showcased her 20+ year of administrative experience.

It was then, that she realized that it was her resume(s) that had hurt her and that they were to blame.

Both resumes (the $300 and the Free one) worked too well in showcasing her experience(s) but, the problem was that she was not applying for her old job and the new jobs require very different skills. to doing everything that you need to do, spending ever how long you need to achieve success.

If you are not, then, you will never do any of these things and you will have an extremely hard time finding work.

You need to care about yourself and be doing this for yourself.

If you are not willing to give yourself a 1000% commitment, then, how can you expect anyone else to do more?

Depending upon what type of job, what industry you are applying for will determine if you even need a resume. In some industries, applying for certain kind of (entry level) jobs, a resume (or worse yet…a good resume) is a kiss of death.

DON'T BELIEVE THAT?

Then, you have bought into one of the biggest urban myths that there is. Remember, a resume does not hire you; a person hires you after they meet with you and are impressed by your knowledge of the job, your knowledge about their company and (after) you have demonstrated your commitment to getting that job.

RULE # THREE (URBAN MYTH 2):

"I don't need to custom make a new application for each job because that is a lot of work and/or I have a very good resume already."

The reality is that eight out of ten applications (made by people with a killer resumes) never showed the required skills that the employer needed.

WHY IS THIS?

Each of those eight people decided that it was too much efforts to custom design their application to show the employer that they did have the required skills. Or worse yet, they felt that the employer would be able to dig through their resume/application to discover all of those skills. The one excuse that I love is "Don't you know that is what a _____ does?"

The real world answer to that is "NO!"

The key to remember here is that all that an employer knows about you is what you put on the application.

The employer does not know you; you are not their cousin and they will not have the time to find out about all the skills and abilities that you left out of your application or your one-size-fits-all resume.

The other problem with that one-size-fit-all resume is that you believe in its magical powers to open any door, soften any employer's heart and get you any job; so you send it out to over 400 companies. Sending out massive amounts of generic applications that are wrong (one-size-fits-all) or that doesn't match what the company was hiring for is the surest way to turn your job search into a failed mission...a disaster that could result in your shutting yourself off from future consideration of getting hired.

perfect fit for a job we were trying to fill at the time was unlikely.

If you're not a perfect match on skills and experiences, your resume is unlikely to even be read.

There is a lot of technology that matches a person's skills, experiences and job titles to what's listed in the job posting.

These resumes are automatically rank-ordered on a best fit basis.

MORE IMPORTANT: recruiters spend no more than 10-15 seconds looking at a summary of each profile before deciding to read it.

So even for those in the top of the stack, if the resume doesn't stand out in some way, the person is unlikely to be considered.

The big point is that you can't rely on a lottery-like approach to job hunting by applying to as many jobs as possible with the hope you'll be interviewed.

Instead, you need to use a sophisticated marketing effort based on how recruiters find people to fill their open jobs.

When it comes to your career, the worst things you can do is mistake activity for progress. - Lou Adler 2014

Most entry level jobs require an application and many times these are filled out after you have been interviewed and/or hired.

Here a resume is a loss leader and can (if you have a killer resume) work against you to the point of you not getting a job.

In many occupations a killer resume leads to comment like

"You are over qualified for this job"

"You wouldn't like this job!"

This is due to the snob factor and/or the related issue of the intimidation factor.

If your killer resume is better than the person interviewing you has or worse yet, the person interviewing you doesn't have a resume; you are not connecting on the peer level and more importantly, it just cost you that job.

Sadly, you are proving our point that a mass of applications do not equal a mass of interviews and we all can see you haven't got hired yet.

Maybe, it is time to rethink the whole job seeking process and try to see where you are failing to connect with employers.

In a recent survey of job seekers (here in the Phoenix area) and we have compiled a list of reason as to why they were not getting hired:

- Applying for jobs online or with a resume that did not require either. This is the number one reason why people are not getting hired in the entry-level job market. Many employers are seeking entry level applicants with little or no experience and are not interested in your resume. They are interested in your motivation, availability and your locality. Even the most killer resume will not show the employer those qualities. The employer wants to see you, look you in the eye and see if they like you.

- Killer resumes that are written in a vacuum. These are resumes that were not written with any regards to what the employer was seeking. Without knowing what skills and abilities the employer is seeking, your resume may miss by a mile and the employer will never know that you were the perfect applicant. These resumes will cost you more jobs than the will ever get you if for no other reason(s) than they are too specific (he wants to do this…he wouldn't be interested in that) or are too generic (I don't have time to do a detailed analysis of where he would best fit).

- Resumes that do not clearly point out that you have the required skills, abilities and/or experience. Employers will tell you that they have 14 seconds to scan your resume and if they do not see the skills that they need, they toss your killer resume. Resumes need to lead with a summary of skills, abilities and/or experience to capture the employer's eye.

- Your resume spends all of its space educating the employer in what you job title does instead of what you did with the job and what you achieved.
- We had an employer tell us to not tell her what this job title does but what did you achieve. You must fill in the details. Being a warehouse worker at Ma & Pa

RULE # FOUR: SKILLS NEEDED?

Here is the really kicker, they do not post a job description so everyone assumes that you do not need a little (or even any) experience.

What most (not hired) applicants failed to grasp is that experience is different than skills or abilities and this job does require a lot of skill and ability.

FULL JOB DESCRIPTIONS

Read them several times…tear them apart. Pull out all of the required skills and then, go through each of your jobs and match up what they need and what you have done… that's only if you really want this job?

Many ads do not post a job description or only a fraction of one.

This is why it is hard to get selected here (online). You have no way of knowing what their computer is scanning your application for.

If you do not match up the words and phrases that the computer is searching for, you do not get selected to have a real person look at your application (that is why their job fairs are critical and so much easier to get hired at).

THE SOLUTION IS SEVERAL FOLDS:

The HR Department maintains a "FULL" job description (normal several pages long) that they have to compile with the Department of Labor and their Federal Contracts.

If you ask nice, they will e-mail, fax you or you can pick up at their HR Office. This is a public record due to their Federal Contracts.

Get that and splice, dice and tear it apart...keep all of their phrases and their actual words (this is what the computer was scanning for)...

Apply liberally to each of YOUR job descriptions...you will see a big difference in your call-back ratio.

This is the greatest change in the job seeking market. Employers are (especially on entry level jobs) looking for skills and most importantly, they are looking for your motivation in wanting this particular job and/or working for this company.

The reasoning is that if you are not willing to do that for yourself and your future…how can they expect you to care about their company and the work that they need you to do.

RULE # EIGHT - RISK

(It is easier to get a job if you have a job) Remember what Dr. Hadajob explained that current employment of any sorts (real or volunteer) is critical to going back to work as swiftly as possible. He further explained that this was due to the risk factor that an employer assumes in hiring anyone.

because your trump card is that you are already working. That is your key.
You can use the fact that you are currently employed as leverage to get an employer to meet you outside of normal office hours.

As you look through the killer, do you see the same skills and abilities listed and are they in the same order?

Go through the killer and count key words. How many do you have?

Does your killer match up with what the employer actually needs?

So now you see how far you were off and imagine how many others you have missed by a mile.

Now that you have been through this process you can see that your killer resume has been costing you jobs and

You need to hit them at non-busy business hours:

9:00 AM – 11:00 AM

1:00 PM – 4:00 PM

Any other times it will be hit or miss as everyone is too busy to talk to you.
What is also critical is how you start this conversation.

Never start with
"CAN I TALK TO THE MANAGER?"
This and all of the old standards no longer work and haven't worked for a long time now (5+years).
Instead you want to start a conversation with something to the effect of:

It must be that the seemingly nice interviewer(s) must be a racist, a bigot or just hates people that are clearly smarter than them. If you were rich, you would sue them off into the next century!

Employers only rarely will explain why they reject candidates, which only adds to your frustration.

Left to conjecture, a common response is to assume the worst in others and blame them for our own situation.

Dejected candidates often say:

Employers aren't interested in your entire biography. It's not their responsibility to look at your résumé and to try to match it to a particular job opening.

They can easily pass you over when you don't somehow relate your experience, skills and successes to their needs.

or show other signs of excessive nervousness, you harm your own cause. If you're the kind of person who gets rattled when you're in the hot seat, get a coach to help you through the process with lots of practice interviews.

7. YOU DO POOR OR NO RESEARCH.

You can bet that your interviewer is well prepared for the conversation, and you need to be as well. Interviews are not a time for unstructured conversation. When you believe you can talk your way through anything without preparation, you sow the seeds of your own destruction.

But when you ask a question based on the information you already have to learn more about a given situation, initiative, etc., you can show that you're well prepared and focused on this job at this company.
Of course, there are many other mistakes job seekers might make.
But the point is this: when you scapegoat others or your circumstances for your lack of success so far, you do nothing to bolster your chances for success in the future.
When you take the time to carefully and cogently present yourself with poise, success can and likely will follow.

Making a good first impression is a very important part of the interview. Most people make a judgment about a person within the first few minutes.

If you are prepared for your interview you can make sure that your first impression is a good one.

Preparing for the Interview

Do your research. Learn about the company history, what they do and why they do it.

Be prepared to spend time on the company's website, watch the video

Have a pen, paper and multiple copies of your resume with you.

Dress like you are ready to go to work. Never over dress or dress professionally for jobs where you would not go to work that way.

Over dressing creates a series of disconnects in how the employer views you, your understanding of the nature of the work and/or your ability to do the job.

If you are unfamiliar with the location of the company you should figure out the route before heading to the interview. You may want to drive the route the day before to make sure you know exactly where you are going and plan to arrive ready.

Your interview starts as soon as you arrive at the company. You never know who you will meet during the time that you are at the company.

Just because you aren't in an actual interview with someone doesn't mean that

The employer knows what makes them special and will be impressed that you took the time to learn this too.

Here is a refinement to the process that I saw in action the other day and it just blew the employer (interviewer) away.

The applicant pulled out a forty-nine cent notepad and flipped through a couple of pages to find the information and then reviewed it with the employer "I see that you won the City Phoenix Award for best new company..."

How to Ace Your Job Interview

Do not curb your enthusiasm. Win Sheffield, 59, a coach for the last 10 years with the career counseling firm The Five O'clock Club, says a lot of job seekers forget that one of the most crucial parts of interviewing is convincing the hiring manager that you truly desire the job. Interviewers don't just look for applicants who have the requisite skills and will fit in with a company. Now more than ever, they want candidates who want them. Sheffield is absolutely right, says Cynthia

"UNREALISTIC JOB SEARCH ZONE."

There is no doubt that the President is right that no one working full-time should live in poverty. That isn't the problem especially here at the UJS as we are very progressive in promoting "living wage" but, we also understand the harsh realities of the Phoenix (Entry level) Job Market where there are very few $15/Hr. non-sales jobs that do not come with a very long laundry list of skills, abilities and/or require a ton of experience.

We understand that Arizona is by purpose and design the Patron Saint of the minimum wage job due to the lack of employee labor laws and unions.

We understand that this is a bottom-line labor market where the workers are without rights and where there is no labor law that forces an employer to pay you…if they don't then you are reduced to taking them to small claims court to get your money.

In this market, there are high-end jobs for corporate executives, sales reps and highly specialized technology techs or HVAC

REALISTIC JOB SEARCHING

The other day I ran into a young kid who had only returned to the job market after a long and extended stay in the wilderness of total, utter unemployment. He starts the conversation with

"I would rather not get a job if I can't get a quality job..."

Out of curiosity and a sense that this kid needed help, I continued to ask

"What do you mean?"

He looked at me like I was a Martian and

The first question that I wanted to ask was
"Have you ever earned $40K?"
But, I know that he hadn't and I tried to persuade him by saying

"Wouldn't $9-11/Hr. be better than zero dollars?"

He answered "NO!" and walked away…

No one has ever been hired by a resume or the application alone.

The resume/application is a prop to get attention that you hope will lead to an interview. Why not cut out the middle steps and go out and get yourself in direct contact with a person who can hire you? Cut out all of the middle men (people) and the great thing with these small cleaning companies is that you can do just that – if you try.

She told me that the FATAL "You shot yourself in the foot" mistake(s) that an applicant makes are:

FACTOR ONE: The BS Factor comes from applying for stores that are a long way from your home location.

The BS is that the employer knows that it is BS that you will or that you can travel to their location on a daily basis without missing days or running late (especially if you are on a bus).

Within 5 miles, the bus is reliable transportation after that it is an excuse to being late or being absent.

This manager tells me that this is so common with all of her stores; your application is not reviewed unless they are totally desperate.

Her suggestion is that if you keep your job search within a 5-10 mile range of home.

The Manager told me, that she really likes to hear that "I just live down the street" as this tells her that you are more likely to be on time and that you will have the flexibility to stay late or come in on your day with short notice. She said that might not be fair but, that is the reality of the retail market.

FACTOR TWO: (I never thought about this but, now it makes sense) the second biggest reason that she does not call people is because they applied for multiple openings at her store.

According to her (and echoed by other managers) this is a real negative and usually means that she will not waste time with you.

The impression that the applicant makes is that they are willing to do anything usually means that they are desperate for employment and that they are just applying for things whether or not they really qualifies for them.

She says that this wastes her time trying to figure out what you want to do when you grow up and as she is busy running the store to take that much time on any one candidate.

Most importantly, she says that it shows her that you really do not have a specific interest or worse yet (if the applicant is a mess – incomplete, rushed, and hard-to-read and/or lacks details or doesn't relate to the skills that she is looking for) you don't care.

To her, the application represents you at your best and she judges it as such.

Her suggestion is to read the job descriptions and determine which job is a perfect fit for your skills (you need to do this as she doesn't have the time or interest to do) and, then, apply for that job.

She said that you must complete the application with an emphasis on the skills, abilities or experience that is requested in the ad.

She said that this should be your base to build a case that she needs to call you in for an interview.

The application must be neat and easy for her to read (sloppy applications are tossed as they take too much time to figure out).

Remember, to her, this is your very best and sloppiness is a sign that you really didn't want this job.

She said that is your job not hers as she has a job and she ended the thought by saying that she isn't Colombo!

As most of progressives we have stood shoulder-to-shoulder with the workers of Walmart who were responsible for a generation of record corporate profits and helped to make the company the largest company in America but, who had to scramble with food stamps and family assistance to put milk in their refrigerators.

As a conservative, we railed at the corporation shifting employee costs to the government in order to max their profits. We read the reports from the corporate's

SPONSOR A WOMAN APPRENTICE

In a recent trade journal survey, the western states can expect as early as 2015 to face a skilled labor shortage of at least

160,000

APPROXIMATELY 50% OF THE POPULATION IS MADE UP OF WOMEN

BUT ONLY 10% OF APPRENTICES ARE WOMEN

The reality is that we had already lost a middle generation of skilled trade's workers with the collapse of the real estate market especial here in the western states where they were forced to move on to new fields, careers and a different life style because of the collapse of the market and are not willing to take another roll of the dice with the future of their families...been there and done that. To add to this mess, we are now losing our older generation of seasoned, journey level workers who are bumping into the retirement of the baby boom generation and there is not enough of the youngest generation to fill their boots.

The savior of the industry or so we are told is its long term commitment to apprenticeship programs to groom the new generation to stop the decline or so we thought until we started looking into these new apprenticeship programs.

TOO MANY JOB FAIRS THIS WEEK

There were, at last count, over 20 different hiring events going on this week and the number is growing as we chat...

Great and wonderful don't you think?

Normally you would not think otherwise but, with so many different events, different locations and only so many bus passes to get you there, it becomes a nightmare of choice and figuring where to invest your time, effort and limited resources.

The key is to sort events by the likelihood of getting hired. Not all job fairs are the same and some will be a total waste of time because they were not actually hiring at the event.

You will need to sort the events by what they are hiring for, what you are best qualified to do and (the most important factor) will you have a chance to bypass the normal HR Application Nightmare and talk directly to a hiring manager. The most direct way to getting hired is by sitting down and talking to the person who is hiring and you have a one-on-one chance to impress them.

Dina was homeless and living at UMOM's Watkins Shelter when she heard about the Barista Training Program at UMOM. Not having worked for two years, she was excited to refresh her skills in the restaurant industry. She commuted every day from Watkins in South Phoenix to Helpings Café for her training. Dina graduates today from the program and is now living in her own apartment. Below are some fun facts about Dina and her experience in the program:

"My favorite thing about the Barista Training Program is the people I get to work with on a daily basis. After I graduate I plan on looking for jobs at Starbucks or at the airport. My favorite Starbucks drink is the caramel macchiato and making other people happy makes me smile."

dependable worker with good attention to detail and are well known for your stubbornness in not letting go of something that you started, you might be a good candidate to becoming a professional care giver.

Not joking or kidding because you don't need money, credit doesn't matter and at the start, you will not need to be licensed.

You just need the skills listed above and have the ability to make a poster, a flyer and business cards.

That sounds hard?

Not really, all you need in MSWord (every computer at every center, library or school has this program) and an ideal of what you want to offer.

Business cards are even easier as MSWord has a template and you just fill in the blanks. Next you need to think of who could use your service and where do they frequent or hang out.

If I want to work with in-home health care with seniors, I would take my poster, flyers and business cards to the local senior centers and to doctor offices where they cater to seniors.

You can also, place your own FREE Ads on Craig's List and other bulletin boards that cater to services for working folks.

You would be surprised how much business you can generate for your services because of the high cost of in-home care.

While the care registries pay you very little, know that they charge your patents a great deal of money and many people can't afford these services.

Families are desperate and are looking for caring, dependable people to take care of grandma while they are at work.

Every day, back in the day at DES, my order unit got calls from desperate families who couldn't afford the registries or services.
They pleaded and begged us to send caregiver.
In fact, most registries were founded by a person who was doing what I just suggested and discovered that they had more business than they could handle themselves.

Since you have no office, you do not need operating funds other than a bus card to get over to granny's house to take care of her.

You will need to pay your own taxes as most families will hire you as 1099 (which is an independent contractor).

You need to read up on this because you need to budget your income to pay your taxes and social security. All you need to start is the will to do it. That's it!

that by going over to the store and introducing yourself…If you can't or won't…this tells the employer everything they need to know about how seriously you REALLY want their job…NOT!
Most importantly, this says that you do not care enough…that you might do this job…OR NOT?
NO ONE wants to hire the person who demonstrates that they would take this job as a last resort…everyone wants to hire the person who is excited…who likes/love the work and who appreciates the opportunity,

STEP THREE*: Explain that you understand...

Understand that you are being offered an opportunity and that you appreciate it...because the employer believes that they are offering you an opportunity and most applicants (mostly those not hired) never demonstrate that they get it...little-a-lone that they appreciate it. At the end of the interview, tell the employer that you still want the job...these things make a big difference and many times...means the difference between getting hired or not.

They aren't telling because in the end (if you have the basics) it comes down to attitude and how well you will fit in.
As a pro, we will not waste time telling you that you need to know the menu, the reviews and have been looking at the chef's blog or their Facebook page because you already know to do this as part of your normal prep work for the interview.

STARTED IN 2000...

GENERAL MANAGER 2002

Q: Why did you make the decision to work at Chipotle?

A: When I originally got hired it was just a part-time job to provide a second source of income. I actually walked in to help someone I knew apply for a job there. The manager there asked me if I wanted to fill out an application as well. In the end, I was offered a position.

Q: How long did it take you to be promoted?

A: It took 18 months to go from crew member to General Manager. At that time, we didn't have the Restaurateur program but once it was rolled out, it took me about 14 months to achieve that elite position.

Q: How has Chipotle impacted your life?

A: It has changed the way I eat and I've lost my taste for fast food, I'm more conscious about what I eat and where it came from. When possible, I choose organic and healthier options. Even more important is that I am able to provide a better way of life to my son.

Q: What is your favorite menu item?

A: A pair of soft corn tacos, one chicken or carnitas and one steak, both with green tomatillo salsa, fresh tomato salsa, a little sour cream and lettuce. Some chips and a side of sour cream, corn salsa and green salsa mixed complete the meal for me.

Q: What advice do you have for someone interested in Chipotle?

A: The first thing I would share with them is Chipotle's vision and mission to change the way that people think about and eat fast food. I would encourage people to believe in building a career here, not just a job. There are so many opportunities to grow.

At the end of maybe a 30 minute conversation, he told me I would be on a waiting list and directed me to a location that was way too far away for me to commute to on a regular basis - apparently that location needed employees far more than the one I actually wanted to work at. It was very off-putting.

You can use this as an excuse; you can close down and hide away in the past by refusing to learn new and better ways of beating the system to gain the employment that will start to change your life. Your choice!

WHERE TO START? WHAT TO DO?

Let's start with the reality of the job seeking market you are about to be entering.

These newly unemployed job seekers have several advantages over you and that makes them more employable than you.

The mere fact that they are coming off a job makes them 6-10 times more likely to get your job.

There is what employers call a

If you are employed (or just laid off from a season job) then the employer believes that you were unemployed due to the economy and your current (last) employer took the risk.

Given the tough competition that you are about to face, you need to be truthful with yourself about how serious you are about getting a job.

Do not expect or depend upon the kindness of strangers to give you a job. There is an ancient American Belief that says that we help those who (first) are trying to help themselves.
What this means is that "If you are unwilling to help yourself..."
why would anyone (other than Mother Theresa) want to help you?
Dependence upon others only makes you weak and broke.
You need to educate yourself, learn how to beat the system and only then will you have the confidence to be successful.

Without a good recipe and proper prep work, there is no way to predict how successful your meal will be.

This is a key to everything we do in life and is extremely important to your job search.

In job seeking, prep work is commonly referred to "doing your homework" or

"BRINGING YOU'RE A-GAME."

Doing your homework is critical to giving you the ingredients that you need to impress the employer with the fact that you are a serious applicant, that you really want a specific job with their company and tells the employer that you are willing to bring a higher level of commitment to the job than would the person who was not will to invest time to help themselves prep for the interview.

Proper prep work in your job search is that you are willing to invest your own time to learn as much about the company as you can.

Proper prep involves learning who they are and what they do and (most importantly) what makes them special.

In this market, the first (most important) question they will ask you is "tell me what

Your ability to answer this question and be able to have an intelligent conversation about who they are and what they do, will determine if the employer will take you serious.

In fact, many employers tell us that the way you answer this tells them everything they need to know about how successful you will be.

Employers tell us that if you were not willing to invest time in helping yourself then, what would you be willing to offer their company?

their misunderstanding of the real labor market, old urban legends about job seeking or lack of proper prep work in getting ready to look for work.

Each of these following barriers is very real and will prevent you from getting a job or from keeping a new job.

Getting ready to go to find a job or to go to work requires a good deal of education on the labor market and the logistics of getting your personal issues resolved before you when try to find work.

Before you can start to worry about applications, resumes and interview techniques, you need to get yourself and the logistic of your family issues (like daycare) prepped.

A big failure of a new job seeker is to not have a plan in place for childcare issues (with an emergency backup), medical appointment (restrictions), legal issues and outstanding warrants.

THE LACK OF A

importantly) that you can keep a job is that you have a childcare plan in place before you start looking for a job.

For families and (more importantly) for single parents who have small children, a plan for childcare is an important factor in whether they are employed or not.

Childcare plan (with hopefully an emergency plan as a backup) will determine what type of work, the location and the hours that you can work.

Childcare can become complicated due to the number of children and their ages and needed to be considered before you start to look for work.

Who will take care of your children?

What hours is the daycare open and what can you afford?

If you have school age that need to be put on a bus and/or picked up from the bus, then the hours and location of your employment will be a serious issue.

Most job seekers are so rushed to get a job that they blow off or brush aside the complicated issues of childcare figuring that they can work the issue after they get work.

This is a very good recipe for failure and for losing a good job because the hours don't work for their family.

Childcare realities must be an important part of a decision to get a job.
No matter how good the job is, the opportunities that it offers or the money to be made; if the job does not allow you the time or logistics to drop off and pick up your children from the school bus then, you are wasting your time.
While childcare issue will not technically prevent you from getting that job but, it will cost you the job very quickly.

shows that the number one reason that people lose a job (especially in the first 90 days) is because the employee showed up late or misses days due to children illness or lack of an emergency childcare plan.

New job seekers should sit down and determine what their childcare issues are, in what they can do to resolve it and a workable emergency plan that includes release forms for children who get sick at school.

Most of these parents will need to rethink full-time employment and especially the job's location to allow them a proper time cushion to take care of their children will rule out full-time employment or jobs that not in the neighborhood – due to the children, you will need to be set those jobs aside (for now) and focus on part-time employment that allows flexibility on the work hours.

They scolded us because (on a spreadsheet) our salary bell curve fell below that mystical $12/Hr. threshold. When asked is it not better to have work, an opportunity for growth into career and then, we asked:

"Isn't $8/HR. better than no dollars per hour?"

The person seriously answered that they would rather see these people still unemployed than earning a mere $8/HR. Think about her mindset?

understand that a quality job is more than salary; it is about finding our place where we want to be, doing work that we enjoy and being around people we enjoy.
Given that definition, we must say that we all know many people with big salaries that do not have a quality job.
When we use salary alone to measure success then we really do not understand the real needs of the clients that we claim to serve little-a-lone understand our clients. So here is our salute to the junk job.

For the employer this kind of event is low cost marketing method to drive you to their website that costs them the same as one ad on Jobbing or Monster.

So, the turn out numbers are so critical to the agency or company staging the event.

The larger the turnout number, the more likely the event will draw out more employers with wads of cash to secure a broken table and an AC Plug.

The nature, purpose and the very structure of the event is not designed to put you to work.

HIRING EVENTS VERSUS JOB FAIRS?

Hiring events are different from a job fair. Hiring event are an event where an employer says I need to hire _____(number) of people for the following position(s) and that you need to come at a special time and location to be interviewed. A hiring event is about being interviewed and hired (if you did your job correctly in preparing for this) directly. This is where you can talk directly to the people who have the power to hire you

CAREERS IN MEDICAL SUPPORT

Welcome to the Healthcare Hiring here in Arizona.
Right now we are at the low point of hiring as the hiring season is yet to start.
Yes, there is a hiring season.
The season ties into the arrival of and/or the departure of our lovely snowbird visitors. As they arrive for the winter, the hospitals, clinic and related segments of the industry start hiring to fill the need for extra workers.

Likewise, come early summer when they leave, hiring slows down but, it has not grinded to a stop.

So here we are in the depth of the off season and I am here to say that there are still a wide range of jobs available if you know where to look and how to apply.

Many times, the hospitals do not hire medical support or administrative staff directly because it is (someway) seasonal employment.

They hire through agencies and registries even though they post their jobs up on their website.

Many hospitals or managed care facilities would be hard pressed to give a list of people they hired from the web promotions.

There are three ways to break into this market. It is not hard but, it is not necessarily easy to do.

Here they are in the order of their effectiveness:

Know someone (who is well respected or liked at the facility) and have them hand walk you through the HR Process. Be careful as this can backfire and bite you big time, if the person is not well liked. Your success or failure is tied to this person's likeability.

Get referred by the wrong person and you (may) never work for that facility because you are forever tied to the goodness or badness of the person who referred you. ($18/HR) find out what agency or registry that the facility hires through and go register with them.

The downside here is that you pay for this access in the form of the agency makes several dollars per hour off of your labor and that makes it hard to every get a permanent position. ($14/HR.)

Low ball yourself to the minimum salary for your occupation and be willing to work at that wage in order to secure the job.

EXAMPLE WOULD BE:

We had a med tech that was making $18/HR. but, he wanted to chance hospitals.

We initially put his acceptable salary as $16/HR and there was no response.

We tried $14 and then $12/HR. and still nothing.

We went down to $10/HR. and the hospital called him within minutes of us posting his application. ($10/HR.)
